

Major landmarks like mountains and rivers were important in people's lives.

Another camp - a different tribe?

Camps were temporary, the shelters made from wooden poles and animal hides.

Estuaries provide food from land, sea and river. They were rich hunting and fishing grounds.

Wolf Brother, by Michelle Paver, is a novel about life in the Mesolithic forests of 10,000 years ago.

In Mesolithic times the forests were largely oak, hazel, pine and birch.